It is based on the true story of Augusto and Michaela Odone, two parents in the relentless search for a cure for adrenoleucodystrophy of their son Lorenzo (ALD). It was filmed mainly from September 1991 to February 1992 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. The film was limited to North America on December 30, 1992, and two weeks later, on January 15, 1993, a nationwide release was released. It was generally well received by critics and received two nominations at the 65th Academy Awards, but was a box office explosion, grossing just $7.2 million against its $30 million budget. Lorenzo is a bright and bright boy living in the Comoros, as his father Augusto works for the World Bank and is there. However, when his parents move back to the United States, he begins to show signs of neurological problems (such as falling, hearing loss, tantrums, etc.). The boy was diagnosed with adrenoleucodystrophy (ALD), which was fatal within two years. Unable to find a doctor capable of treating the rare disease of his son Augusto and his wife Michaela, they went on a mission to find treatment to save his son. In their quest, Odones clash with doctors, scientists and a support group that is skeptical that everything can be done about ALD, much less lay people. But they persist by setting up camp in medical libraries, reviewing animal experiments, enlisting the help of Professor Gus Nicholas, badgers, interviewing leading doctors around the world and even organizing an international symposium on the disease. Despite researching the dead ends, the horror of watching their son's health decline and being surrounded by skeptics (including the support group coordinators they visit), they persisted until they finally hit on Therapy. Odones sponsored an international meeting of scientists, research on ALD, requiring two conditions in advance. First, they insist that the meeting is focused on potential treatments, and secondly, they demand that they be allowed to participate, despite the fact that no lay scientist. The key scene in the film depicts this encounter, in which scientists present their research. When Dr. William B. Rizzo mentions his research in which the addition of oleic acid to cultural cells blocked the accumulation of factors that cause ALD, Odones jump into the conversation, asking if this oil could help their son. While scientists are playing down their hopes by pointing out that it will take years of oil production and testing in clinical trials, Odones capture the promise of this possible therapeutic treatment. As the scene ends, Michaela Odone is shown launching an effort to find someone able and willing to produce the same oil Dr. Rizzo gave to her cells. They connect with more than 100 firms around the world until they find an elderly British chemist, Don Suddabi, who works at Croda International and is ready to take on the task of distilling the proper formula. Odones get a precious bottle of oil (actually containing two specific long chains of fatty acids isolated from rapeseed oil and olive oil) and add it to your son's diet. This treatment proves successful in normalizing the accumulation of a very long chain of fatty acids (which have been causing their son's steady decline) as measured in blood levels. This treatment stops the progression of his disease and is called Lorenzo Oil. This oil is soon set to be successful in preventing the progression of harm in other patients with ALD. Meanwhile, however, Lorenzo has a lot of neurological damage, and Odones is dismayed to see that oil can reverse his son's symptoms only very, very slowly. Odones understand that a faster improvement in their son's severe condition will require treatment to repair the shell of myelin (lipid insulator) around the nerves, and Augusto is shown to be taking on the new task of organizing biomedical efforts to heal myelin damage in patients. Finally, Lorenzo, at the age of 14, shows some improvement (swallowing for himself and answering yes or no questions, blinking), and it turns out that he has regained his sight, can move his head from side to side, voice simple sounds and learns to use a computer. The film ends with scenes of ALD patients who were treated with Lorenzo's oil earlier during their illness. These patients had the devastating neurological problems that Lorenzo suffered from. Perhaps to emphasize the plot aspect of Everyman (the notion that treatment can affect families and individuals anywhere), many smaller roles have been played by inexperienced actors or irrelevant with unusual physical features and manners. For example, the poet James Merrill noticed the casting director at a New York public reading of his poems. His sparse speaking cadences were used in a symposium scene in which he played a doctor-interrogator. The Music Movie features Allegri Miserere, Edward Elgar Cello Concerto, and Adagio Barber for Strings and Mozart Ave verum corpus K.618. The opening song is Kijana Mwana Mwali (Song of a Young Lady) performed by traditional artists of Gonda. In 1960, Maria Callas's recording with the orchestra and the La Scala Choir was heard singing from The Norma Bellini at a time. Music for the Easter Midnight Mass is the hymn of the Russian Orthodox Church The Virgin of the Virgin (Rejoice, O Virgin) from Three Choirs from King Fyodor Ioannovich, taken from the album Sacred Songs of Russia by Gloria Dei Kantores. Other musicals include Barber Agnus Dei and Mahler's Symphony No. 5. Receiving a critical response from Roger Ebert of the Chicago Sun Times gave the film four out of four stars and called it an extremely moving and complex film. He added that it was impossible not to have it overwhelmed, and James Berardinelli of ReelViews gave him three of the four stars and declared that it is a war for knowledge and the victory of hope through perseverance. The Rotten Tomatoes aggregation review retrospectively garnered feedback from 39 critics to give the film a 92% rating, with an average rating of 7.07/10, as of September 2020. Medical reaction Although the film seemed to accurately depict events related to the boy's condition and the efforts of his parents during the period of time covered by the film, he was criticized for painting miraculous treatment. Subsequent studies with Lorenzo's oil have not clearly proven its long-term efficacy in the treatment of ALD after its onset. The film's real theme, Lorenzo Odone, died of pneumonia in May 2008 at the age of 30, living two decades longer than originally predicted by doctors. Hugo Moser, on which Professor Nicholas's character was founded, named the image of this character in the film The box-office film grossed $7,286,388 domestically with a budget of about $30 million. Susan Sarandon was nominated for Best Actress in a Drama at the 50th Golden Globe Awards. The film was nominated for best original screenplay, written directly for the screen at the WGA Awards.
